

Valuable Poster and Map Collection Protected by Ulrich Cadfile

The Jefferson Middle School, in Jamestown, NY is a public school that houses grade levels 5-8 with a student population of approximately 400. The library and its staff, provide a quiet haven for book-worms and those with a thirst for learning, even when outside of the classroom. Though a large computer lab, massive book collection and numerous student work displays provide little room for more supplementary materials, an Ulrich Cadfile has added yet another learning opportunity for the students at Jefferson.

The Cadfile at Jefferson houses a map collection and Picture America prints from the National Endowment for Humanities. While access is restricted to further protect the materials, teachers can call on the collection for map units and librarian, Julie Livengood can retrieve the maps for students to look at and reference.

Especially helpful is the space saving technology provided with the vertical filing system. Also, the easy accessibility and labeled folders make it easy to locate the correct material quickly. Furthermore, the entire unit is easily wheeled through the school for classroom use if necessary.

“Once the materials were organized, the file made it very easy to catalog and enter each item into the circulation system.”

-Julie Livengood, Jefferson Middle School Library Media Specialist

Article available at : <http://ulrichplanfiling.com/2009/02/jefferson-middle-school/>